What happens when you go to the theater

When I go to a performance at the Colony Theater, I might get there from a car that parks in the parking garage.

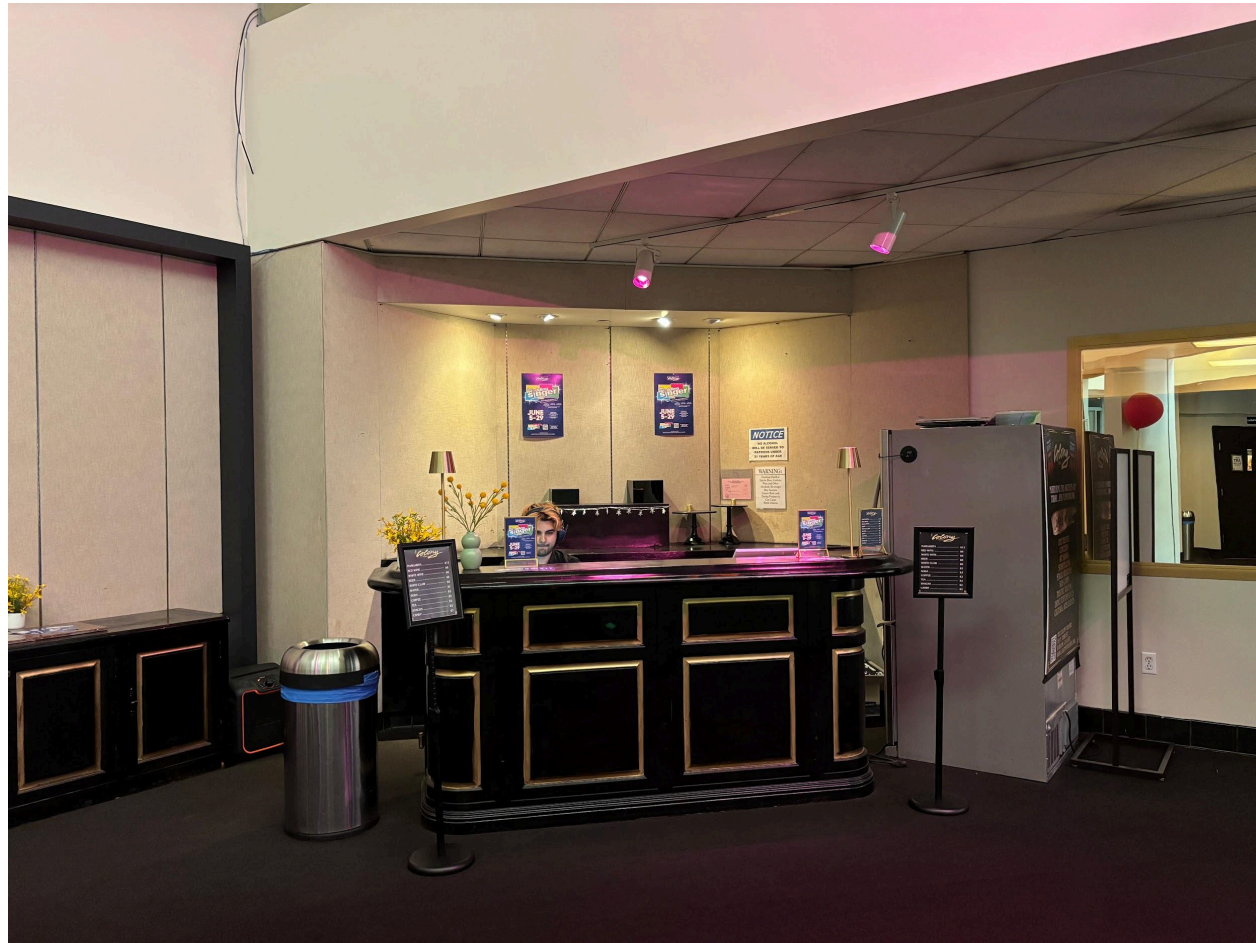

Alternately, I might walk in the front door.

I will walk into the lobby, the big room between outside and the theater. It may be busy or crowded in the lobby!

I will get my tickets from the box office. Everyone needs a ticket to enter the theater. I may have to wait in line.

If I am hungry I can buy snacks at the bar or eat something I brought from home.

In the lobby, I can color before the show or if I need to take a break during the show.

I can get water from the water fountain and use the bathroom, right by the front door to the theater.

When it is time, I will walk into the theater. I may need to wait in line.

I will have assigned seats and may need to walk up the stairs to find them. I do not need to sit in my seats during the whole performance. I will feel free to get up at any time, move, and vocalize.

If I need to take a break, I can come down the backstairs and relax in the art gallery or lobby. I will follow the green EXIT signs to find my way out of the theater.

When the show is over, the cast will come out and take a bow. I can applaud and then make my way out of the theatre back into the lobby. I will make sure I have all my personal belongings before I leave my seat.
